I Certify I have known Thomas Craddock of Ballynahinch for many years that he has lived very convenient to my Residence that he has been occasionally in my employment that I always found him a strictly Honest Correct and Industrious man. That with the greatest degree of Astonishment and doubt I have heard of the charge lately brought against him and for which he now lies in Gaol under Sentence of Transportation as he is one of the last men I would consider Guilty of such an offence – that under all the circumstances that I have Heard I think fair and reasonable grounds exist for a memorial in his behalf to the Lord Lieutenant for a Mitigation of his Sentence

6 March 1842

Sir,

I accordance with your desire, communed to me in your letter of the 4th of March, I have the honor to acquaint for his Excellency's information, with the particulars of Thomas Craddock's case.

Eleanor Craddock & Thomas Craddock were indicted for receiving £10, a purse & [some?] wearing apparel knowing them to be stolen. The first witness was Margaret Ward, who swore that she & her husband had by care & industry saved a sum of 27L in sovereigns & guineas, & that she kept in a box in her house, under lock & key. That the only [.....] were herself & her husband, & a little girl her grand daughter, Mary Ward. That Mary Ward gave her back 5 Sovs. & 5 [shillings?] Mary Ward was next examined (10 or 11 years of age). Her evidence was, that she became intimate with the prisoner Eleanor who told her to insult her grandmother & grandfather & make them dislike her. That they had a pair of scissors attached to the key of the box, where the money was. That the prisoner Eleanor made her believe that if she Mary could get the money out of the box, the prisoner would go with her to America & that she & her brother to freedom?. Thomas and Mary Ward would all live together there. That induced greater representations. Mary Ward stole the keys from her grandmother, and the prisoner Eleanor to whom they were given went to [Balunach?] (Ballynahinch?) to a pawn broker, to endeavour to process a key to match the key of the box, that she returned, & said she failed, and that Eleanor, then sent Mary Ward to borrow the scissors to which the key was attached, that old Thos Ward having lent the scissors, Eleanor had a false key made from the one attached to them, which she afterwards gave to Mary Ward, who took the money out of the box, and gave some of the money to Eleanor for herself and [.....] for the prisoner Thomas, who was to [...] it until all went to America, & then use it on their general account. That 1 sovereign was to be given to a person by the name of [Crampwell?]. That the prisoner Eleanor then induced her Mary to abscond with her to the County of Tipperary. That Eleanor bought some things for Mary Ward, which were of low value. That she returned with Eleanor afterwards to Galway, & that as the prisoner Eleanor came near a deep bog hole on the verge of which was a turf stack She began to open the end of the stack next to bog hole & cried out that [...] was rotted, & asked the child to assist her, that Mary Ward became [frightened?] and came away - and it appeared to her that the fear was not without grounds, as I have like doubt that the object was to murder the child. [Crampwell?/Crasswell?] to whom the sovereign was given told Ward & his wife which led to the discovery. Thomas Wards house was searched by the police. In the box some sovereigns Mary Craddocks clothes, & a purse which she identified as Eleanors found in it.-

Thomas Craddock said the box was his. Crampwell was also examined, also swore that Eleanor said to him, if her admitted the receipt of the sovereign the girl would be transported. This witness duly corroborated Mary Ward, whose evidence was given in a manner strongly to impress the conviction of its truth. [from? [the?] whole of the case altho I think Thomas the memorialist was involved in the transaction after it became highly criminal, I do not think he was engaged in its original arrangement. and as the principal Eleanor has been sentenced also to 14 years Transportation I think the ends of justice would be answered by commuting Thomas sentence to such period of imprisonment his country may approve of.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant

He and Eleanor Craddock sentenced fourteen years Transportation I understand Memorials were sent to your Excellency respecting his Innocence which caused him not to be transported but three years Imprisonment in Galway Gaol.
